THE MURDER OF BEN. JONES. REGISTERED STATE STOOK.—The attention is called to the sale of this stock advertised to take place to-day at the old postoffice

The evidence in the case may be summed up as

On Sunday last the murdered man, with Prince Prioleau, Stophen Jones and James Jenkins, all of them colored, were in company together, and at about 7 P. M., started out to go to the West Point Mills. After they had gone some distance two white men passed Prioleau, who had dropped behind, and Priolesu heard Stephen Jones call out twice to Ben Jones to go on home. Priolesu turned to look, and saw the two white men standing up, and saw Ben Jones, who was in front of them, rur off the sidewalk, holding bis head down. Prioleau ran up and asked the white men what was the mat-ter, and asked one of them whether he knocked the boy Jones. The man replied with a curse, in speaker, Prioleks, who then said, "No you can't." The white man, when some more words had passed, drew a knife and made at Prioleau, who ran to the sidewalk and found that Ben Jones was dead. Prio-leau did not witness the fatal blow, but could recog-and heard some one say, "By God, I will not move for you;" and another person say, "Well, I will not move for you." Directly after, Jenkins heard Ben

Jones say, "Oh, Lord!" He turned back at once and caught Jones, who had then been cur. Stephen Jones, who was one of the party, heard ben Jones cry out "Oh, Lord," and when he turned met Prince Prioleau running towards him (the witness); he saw three or four white men, who were walking slowly, and did not disturb him; a few minutes later. Prince Desperate and Bloody Combat between The Wlight of the Burglars and the Burglar and his Intended Victim-

On Tuesday morning, between four and five o'clock, while Mr. and Mis. George Martin, living at

No. 17 Ann-street, were lying in bed, Mrs. Martin, who happened to be awake, saw two colored men en ter the window of her chamber from the plazza.

Mrs. Martin lay perfectly quiet and tried to rouse her husband, who was sound asleep. One of the burglars remained in the chamber, while room. The one who remained in the chamber wer towards the bed, and while he lowered the covering and felt under the pillow, had a large butcher's knife in his hand, which he held over Mr. Martin.

Mrs. Marin made no sign, but saw all that went on.

When the burglar left the bed, he placed the knife in his teeth, and walked about the room, searching the drawers, from which he took thirty-five dollars in greenbacks and five dollars in gold, in one dollar pieces. He then went out and joined his companion who was operating in the next reom. After awhile he returned, and again approached the bedside of Mr. Martin, and elevated the huge knife over him.

Mrs. Martin, with great coelness and courage, then jumped up and seized an artillery sword near the bed, and while the burglar's arm was extended ever her sleeping husband, struck the burglar a terrible blow, which caused the knife to fall from his grasp.

While he stooped to pick up the kuife, she gave him a cut on the head, and as h's free swung back, she gave him still another blow of forehead. As the blows fell the blood flew. The burglar rushed at the heroic woman and succeeded in giving her a severe kick in the side, breaking two of her ribs, which caused her to faint and fall. This woke Mr.

Martin, who instantly leaped out of bed, but only in time to see both of the sceundrels jump out of the window. They carried off eleven spirts, two petti-coals, one new bembasine dress, one pair of blan-kets, and the $85 in greenbacks and 15 in gold which they took from the drawer in the chamber. They entered the premises by climbing up the plazza, knowing that there were flere; dogs in the yard.

Mrs. Martin is still in bed, suffering from the effects of the severe blow in the side which broke her ribs, but is doing well. This is one of the boldest burglaries that has happened in Charleston; but it afforded the opportunity for a display of female heroism
